The Priory School, as lead school for the Salop Teaching School Alliance has been selected as one of only 32 schools and colleges in England to take a key role in a new network of school-based centres, or hubs, designed to improve maths education for children and teenagers across the country. The alliance will be the lead for the Salop and Herefordshire Maths Hub.

The Salop and Herefordshire Maths Hub will work to improve maths learning in the area a number of ways, including:

- developing teachers' effectiveness in maths lessons
- providing a wider range of maths-related enrichment activities for pupils
- producing new materials for use in classrooms and for teachers' professional development

Among the activities undertaken to start making these improvements will be an exchange of teachers between schools in the hub and schools in Shanghai, China. This research project will start with Alison Turner from St George's Primary School, Telford and Sue Evans, from Meole Brace Primary School, Shrewsbury travelling to Shanghai in the autumn term this year. The Chinese teachers will make a return visit later in the school year.

The entire Maths Hubs programme, linking all 32 hubs across England, is being coordinated centrally by the National Centre for Excellence in the Teaching of Mathematics (NCETM).
